General Terms and Conditions

Enterprise members of OCEG are licensed to copy, distribute and use all OCEG resources and materials within the member organization, and may apply OCEG's GRC Capability Model methodologies internally. The license further allows the direct inclusion of GRC Capability Model text, and other OCEG resources, within GRC program materials prepared for use within the member organization, on the condition that reference to OCEG and indication of the OCEG copyright over such materials is included in the prepared documents. The license may extend globally to all parts of the organization structured within the same legal entity or the organization may arrange separate memberships if desired. The enterprise starter license provides five licenses which may be assigned to individuals within the organization. Each user may access all content, including all educational offerings presented by OCEG, and may participate fully in OCEG online community groups addressing particular topics, geographies, industries and GRC roles. Additional user licenses may be added to the enterprise license, through the purchase of packages as described above. An enterprise license agreement does not include a license for commercial use of the OCEG resources and materials. This means that no organization (such as software, advisory services or content provider) may use the OCEG content in the marketing or provision of any commercial product or service, unless the organization and the customer of the organization each holds an OCEG enterprise license. Alternatively, a commercial use license may be arranged with OCEG. For information on commercial licensing, contact info@oceg.org. Submission of this form (with request for invoice in lieu of attached payment) constitutes an agreement to pay upon receipt of the invoice. Annual renewal of subscription license will be invoiced 90 days prior to license expiration and will be considered accepted unless written notice of cancellation is received 30 days prior to date of expiration of the then current subscription at the above OCEG mailing address.
